Ken Sagendorf, Ph.D.
Director and Professor, The Innovation Center
Regis University College of Business & Economics

Dr. Ken Sagendorf is the Founding Director and Professor of The Innovation Center in the College of Business & Economics at Regis University, a Jesuit, Catholic university in Denver, CO. Ken's work focuses on designing educational environments that foster deep and transformative student learning. He has consulted and presented around the world on identifying and creating innovative, structural, and connected learning solutions for institutions, companies, and individuals.

Ken and his family (wife, Amy and daughters, Peyton and Brynn) are Episcopalians. They now spend all of their spare time and money on volleyball while occasionally taking advantage of the outdoor lifestyle of Colorado and communing with their neighbors and friends.

Ken holds degrees in biology (B.S.), applied exercise physiology (M.S.), and College Science Teaching (Ph.D.) – all from Syracuse University. All of the orange and blue clothing work well with being a Bronco fan in Colorado.

Ken's publications include books on incorporating disability into the college classroom and curriculum, promoting academic integrity through classroom instruction, course design for student learning and a forthcoming book on regenerative development and the common good. Additionally, Ken has published papers on Jesuit education and received a grant from the Network for Vocation in Undergraduate Education (NetVUE) to explore student advising around spirituality and vocation.
